BASEBALL

The Napanee boys went to Picton last Wednesday and in one of the best and most exciting games played in some time held Picton to a 3-2 score. Napanee was the first up, Blute getting a nice little single reaching first, then Ray Loucks who was next up, put him on second with a single. Rooks, who was fourth man up, scored Blute and then Ross Loucks, the Indian runner, the last man up, scored Rooks. From then on Picton kept the boys from scoring.

Carter, the first man up for Picton, got a single and stole as far as third, but the next three men up struck out holding him there. Picton scored their first run in the third on a wild throw over second by Scrimshaw and a bad throw at third by Ross Loucks.

Scoring then stopped until the eighth, when Picton got one, making it 2 all and then getting the winning run in the last innings by landing an overthrow over third by Scrimshaw.

Earl Loucks, or Wild Bill, was at his best pitching to 33 men and getting 19 strike outs in the nine innings, 3 coming in the first, second, fourth and fifth, and all around the boys played grand ball. Ross Loucks making a beautiful catch in the field and Scrimshaw handling a good game.

Ben Beard, who had a bad cold, asked to be taken out after the first, but while he was in he played a nice game as well as getting a hit.

WATERWORKS AND LAND PURCHASE BY-LAWS

On Monday the property holders of Napanee will be given an opportunity to say by their votes whether they wish to purchase the Napanee Waterworks and the lands south of the canal together with the canal and water power. The Napanee Waterworks is a paying proposition and will not increase the taxes of the ratepayers and in a few years' time the profits from the operation of the plant will be sufficient to reduce the price of water to the consumers. The present owners of the Waterworks are drawing a good substantial dividend from the plant and should private ownership the chance of any reduction in water rates are very slight, while under public ownership this can be done and used to reduce the rates. The town is making a good bargain in securing the waterworks at the price fixed, and every ratepayer should vote "yes" on the by-law.

With regard to the purchase of the canal water power and land, it also is a good business proposition. The present revenue is sufficient to retire the bonds given for the purchase price and leave a profit for the town, and in addition the town secures a splendid site for a small part of which a number of industries, which would further increase the revenue...It would be a mistake to purchase the waterworks plant without also purchasing the source of water and power used by the plant and for this reason alone every ratepayer should vote "yes" on the Canal Purchase By-Law.

VOTE "YES" ON BOTH BY-LAWS.

Our Hair.

A hair consists of a tube made up of minute scales of a material resembling horn, about one four-hundredth part of an inch thick, enclosing a central core of coloring matter, says Sir Bits.

The hair becomes white when this coloring matter is destroyed, and is replaced by tiny air bubbles. The root is embedded in the skin to a depth of about one-fifth of an inch and is furnished with one or two small glands which supply the natural oil to the hair, and also a small muscle which, by contracting, causes the hair to stand on end during fear and other emotions.

The rate at which hair grows depends upon its age, situation, and the treatment to which it is subjected. The average rate for that on the scalp is half an inch per month, while that on the face, when continually shaved, grows one and-fifth inches during the same period.

The number of hairs removed during a complete shave is about 44,000, and during a shaving period of fifty years a man removes about 2,800 miles of hair, weighing 75 pounds.

It is not generally known that a hair will support a weight of from three to five ounces. It is thus almost as strong as a steel wire of the same diameter. Before breaking, however, considerable stretching occurs, and a hair one foot in length extends, as the weight is gradually increased, to 16 inches.

Inspired Joan of Arc.

The real heroine of France was not the Maid of Orleans, but Yolande of Sicily, daughter of the King of Aragon, mother-in-law of Charles VII. of France, according to Ernest Lesigne, author of "The History of the Real Joan of Arc." He writes:

"Yolande of Sicily was a clear-sighted, intelligent woman, who had great influence on the weak king of France, Charles VII. In spite of court intrigues she strengthened the alliance of France with Castile and the Duchy of Milan, with Brittany and Lorraine. It was she who surrounded the king with clever and valiant captains — Dunois, La Hire, Xaintrailles, Duke of Alencon, Richemont — who re-organized the army and became, by their exploits, the terror of the English. It was she who stirred up the town to a realization of the peril to their country and created a militia.

"It was Yolande of Sicily who, connected with the houses of Bar and Lorraine, conceived the idea of stimulating the king's morale by invoking the miraculous, and called Joan from Domremy, the maid, already known to the Duke of Lorraine.

"While the presence of Joan of Arc crystalized the resistance of the French, the truth should be told about Yolande of Sicily. The legend of the Maid of Orleans is a beautiful one and cherished in France, but the wise policy of Yolande should be taught as an example of the power of wisdom and judgment in saving a nation."

When Whip Strikes Horse.

To test the force with which a whip lash strikes the flanks of a horse, M. R. Gaudin, of the French Veterinary Journal, Le Marechal Moderne, has been making some interesting experiments. He got a carter to lash a large lump of moist clay. Under the action of the whip the lash penetrated a certain distance into the clay, and the holes thus made remained.

M. Gaudin then made other experiments on similar lumps of clay to ascertain what force was required to produce similar holes. He found that with a coachman's whip a force equivalent to 75 pounds could be given; with a carter's whip, one of 119 pounds, if the lash be square, and of 140 pounds if it be round, and with that of a rat-tail whip one of 313 pounds.

Although a horse's skin is less sensitive than one's own, we can imagine what pain a lash in the hands of a strong man may be given when we consider how a blow of only three or four pounds on the palm or the back of a boy's hand brings tears to his eyes.

M. Gaudin's experiments prove that it is not the snapper on the end of the whip that cuts most deeply, but the lash itself.

PREMIER WILL BE FIRM

George Leygues Announces His Policy.

Scored Triumph Over Socialists When They Had Sharp Encounter In Chamber of Deputies — Millerand Intends to Be Power as New President of France.

PARIS, Sept. 28.—Georges Leygues, the new French Premier under the presidency of Millerand, won the Chamber of Deputies to his declared policies Saturday and gained a vote of confidence of 507 against 70.

His first encounter with Parliament proved a big success over the Socialist opposition, and after the confidence vote had been given, the Chamber voted adjournment and the deputies resumed their vacation period.

Leygues, the new Premier declared, in outlining his program of governmental action, is necessary to the equilibrium of Europe. He expressed the hope that she would again become a great nation.

France, he added, would continue to aid Poland to establish herself as an independent nation.

"I will continue the program of work of my predecessor," M. Leygues assured the Chamber. "Internally, I will defend liberty and law; I will fortify and ameliorate republican institutions and bring to a realization social reforms.

"I will alleviate the sufferings of the northern provinces and will reconstitute the invaded districts.

"Externally, I will demand strict application of the treaties concluded at the end of the war, making the society of nations a powerful and living organism."

The Premier gave warning that national concord was essential. France's victory in the war, he declared, had shown the world that France is full of splendid vitality. Her sorrows unanimously, he added, and grouped around her many of the other nations.

The statement was very favorably received and provoked loud applause.

Millerand in his presidential statement outlined the policy of the cabinet of Premier Leygues, but added:

"One of the results of the war should be the abolition of obligatory military service.

"France, by its calmness and passionate devotion to peace and prosperity, has won the admiration of the world. Let us work, each one in his place, for more justice, for more humanity and for more kindness."

He paid a tribute to the women of France, declaring that at the most critical hours they proved themselves the equal of the men.

With Alexandre Millerand's election to the Presidency of the French Republic efforts will at once begin to revise the constitution in order to give effect to Millerand's intention to be President in fact as well as in name, making the post as strong as that of the American executive. Approval of his purpose to endow the office with the highest executive privacy is due in large part to the imminent Bolshevist menace, which imposes on France in the view of nearly all statesmen the need of an administration which may declare and enforce a consistent policy free from the intimidations of labor, parliamentary charges and of partisan vagaries.

Radicals oppose Millerand's ideas, and will undoubtedly do their utmost to keep him out of the commanding power he seeks. He will probably carry his case, however, for he is immensely popular in the Chamber of Deputies. When Andre Bourgeois announced the vote from the Tribune, Senators and Deputies turned toward Millerand's box and gave a loud demonstration, the cheering lasting for more than five minutes. Announcement of the Socialist vote stirred a counter demonstration by the Radicals. Millerand arrived early from his Versailles villa, although he did not appear in the gallery until just before the announcement.

The scene lacked noticeably the brilliant appearance customary at such openings for the Presidents of France, the atmosphere being distinctly bourgeois. Few persons eminent in the arts or in society were present. American Ambassador Wallace was in attendance in company with the Spanish Ambassador.

Evacuated Factories.

NAPLES, Sept. 28.—A few persons were wounded Saturday as a result of conflicts between workmen who evacuated factories which they had been holding and Maximalists who tried to prevent them from so doing. During the trouble revolvers and rifle shots were exchanged. The police and carbineers separated the combatants.

The vote in favor of evacuating the plants was overwhelming. The men on leaving the plants lowered the red flag which had been flying over them and replaced it with the national flag.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure catarrhal deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Many cases of deafness are caused by catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure acts through the blood on the mucous surfaces of the system.

BANDITS WERE KILLED

Outlaws Fought Police to the Death.

Men Refused to Leave Haystack In Which They Had Taken Refuge Even When Officers of the Law Set It on Fire, and the Battle Lasted for Five Hours.

REGINA, Sept. 28.—The last pair of the bandit quartette who raided the Red Deer lumber camp a week ago were taken dead by the Saskatchewan provincial police posse in a haystack five miles east of Tisdale on Saturday afternoon.

The end came only with the firing of the stack by the police after a five-hour battle, in which four hundred rounds of ammunition were fired on both sides.

One riddled with shot and both partly burned, the bodies of the captured bandits were difficult to recognise. Tattoo marks on one arm, however, showed that one man was John Trpchuk, a Russian, and the other was identified as "Tony" by the first pair captured by the police.

The two men had previously declared that starving hunted men to take alive, and they carried this determination to extraordinary lengths. After the fire had started in their hiding place in the stacks the police repeatedly advanced to the stack with a white flag, calling upon them to surrender, but on each occasion they were greeted with a volley of fire from the invisible men somewhere in the stack. Only when ammunition ran three o'clock to surrender, and it was then decided to fire the stack, as the police were determined to get them or die before darkness made the feat a possibility. Even after the stack was on fire and the police had closed in, one of the men emptied his revolver into the forces of law and order.

Despite the constant fusillade, however, which attended the fight, not a member of the police posse was touched, nearly all the shots going too high.

The desperadoes were hooked off the top of the stack while it was still burning. One of them had apparently been killed before the stack was fired. All the clothing was burned off the body, disclosing bullet holes in his left arm, four in his body, one being just over the heart, several in his thigh and one in his neck.

The hunt for these men lasted for five days, during which time some of the members of the posse had scarcely any sleep.

FEEL POWERS SLIPPING.

Lenine and Trotzky May Make Bold Experiment.

BERLIN, September 28.—Nicolai Lenine, the Premier, and Leon Trotzky, the War Minister of the Soviet Government, are planning to call an extraordinary Russian Congress to meet at Moscow, to which not only the Bolsheviists, but the members of all political units in Russia will be invited, according to unconfirmed advices received here.

The two men, it is said, feel their power slipping, and to regain it they are contemplating placing the authority in the hands of a commission to be elected by the congress until such time as the permanent Government is made.

A Riga despatch says that Moscow expects that negotiations will be opened with England by virtue of a renunciation by the Soviet Government of all propaganda outside the Russian borders. On this announcement, it is expected, will be made at Riga during the course of the Russo-Polish peace negotiations.

Australia's Big Wheat Crop.

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—According to official advices it is estimated that the total area under wheat in the four principal wheat producing states of Australia this year is 11,552,000 acres, which approaches very nearly the record area of 1915, which previously has there been a greater area under wheat. That was in 1915-16, with a total of 12,484,512 acres.

Owing to the drought last year the yield was a very poor one, but the prospects in this country are much considered to be exceedingly favorable. There is every possibility of a satisfactory yield, the rainfall for the last few months having been ample.

Professor Dies Suddenly.

KITCHENER, Sept. 28. — Seized with an attack of heart failure while in a room in Guelph from Waterloo in the early hours of Saturday evening, Wm. Hunt, of the Horticultural Department of the Ontario Agricultural College, died in the station here. Prof. Hunt had attended a cricket match at Waterloo and was on his way home to Guelph. Shortly after he boarded the train he became ill, became so serious that the conductor decided that he was too ill to travel. He was removed from the train and to a place where he died soon after. The body was removed to Guelph.

Swiss Ignores Soviet.

The fact that Swiss residents in Russia have been mistreated by the Bolsheviki has influenced the Swiss Government in its present action.

Japs Plan to Build Planes.

Nagoya is destined to become the centre of Japanese aviation, according to a translation from the Osaka Mainichi Shimbun. The army machine works, now under construction at Chita, in the province of Nagoya, will be partially completed and in operation, it is expected, by the beginning of this month, at which time the Atsuta airplane factory will be removed to the same place. In this factory seven powerful motors of the Salmson type are now under construction, which, while nominally of 250 h.p., actually develops 250 h.p. The material used is wholly Japanese, and the engines and parts are reported to be most satisfactory.

FRUIT ROTS ON TREES.

Growers Cannot Get Helpers or Necessary Baskets.

ST. CATHARINES, Sept. 28.—Fruit-growers in the Niagara district, with one of the largest crops in history in their orchards, are compelled to see tons of peaches and plums rot on the trees owing to the scarcity of baskets and shortage of cars in which to get their products to the market. Sunday, for the first time, growers picked and hauled fruit on the Sabbath in an effort to get part of the harvest to market. Meanwhile housewives in the city are in the mood to preserve considerable fruit, thanks to the slight decline in sugar prices, but they, in turn, are hampered by a great shortage of fruit jars.

The Niagara fruit-growers cannot find an outlet for their products in the United States market in the first place they are confronted with the car shortage and in the second place, New York State has a bumper crop and is able to meet domestic requirements. The same is true of other fruit-growing districts across the border.

Considerable shipments were made to the United States during the past few years. The duty on Canadian fruit entering that country is ten cents per fifty pounds on plums and peaches, and half a cent a quart on berries. If the Canadian peach, apple fruit and the railways could supply cars, the Canadian growers could still get into the Buffalo and New York markets, as the exchange situation at present is favorable to Canada. Even Montreal business is being lost owing to the failure of the railways to furnish suitable rolling stock. One day recently twelve refrigerator cars were ordered and only two were supplied.

One of the big basket-making factories was burned down recently; hence the shortage of fruit baskets.

Motorists, who brought their own containers, got plums gratis for picking and peaches for 25 cents a basket.

PANIC IN BOSTON.

Law Was Invoked to Stop Run on the Banks.

BOSTON, Sept. 28.—Public uneasiness over local banking conditions on Monday caused runs on some institutions with the result that the Tremont Trust Company, the Fidelity Trust Company, and the Dorchester Trust Company, invoked the law which makes it possible to require 90 days' notice of withdrawals from the savings department in order to stop the rush of frightened depositors.

The run on the Tremont Trust Company, on Tremont street, was participated in by hundreds, and the proportions of the crowd became so great that the police, mounted and on foot, were required to maintain order. The bank sought for an hour to meet the claims against it, and officials announced that there was money on hand to pay all, but the demands became so great that Vice-President Simon Swig announced that the 90 days' notice would be required.

At the Fidelity Trust Company, which also has offices in the downtown district the run was far less serious, but advantage was taken of the law, it was stated, "to allow the public to recover from the prevailing unrest."

GRODNO IS TAKEN.

Victorious Poles Have Now Invaded Russia.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—Grodno, an important city in the north-western Russian area of the Lithuanian frontier, has been captured by Polish troops after heavy fighting, says an official statement issued in Warsaw on Monday. A large number of prisoners and much war material were taken by the Poles, it is said. For some days Polish forces have been gradually working their way around the city, which has been the concentration point of Russian Bolshevik forces on the northeastern Polish front.

A retirement by the Russians in the Grodno region is admitted by the Russian Soviet Government in to-day's official statement. An advance to the southeast of Grodno, however, where the capture of Volkovsk is claimed, is recorded by the statement, which reads:

"In the Grodno region, after a number of battles, our troops were withdrawn to the right bank of the Niemen. After fierce fighting we occupied Volkovsk and a number of villages 8 or 9 miles westward."

Hunger-striker Weaker.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—As Lord Mayor MacSweeney, weaker than at any time since he began his eighty-odd day of fasting in Brixton prison, police claimed to have uncovered a plot for a serious demonstration in his behalf. Officers guarding Terence MacSwinnton in his quarters near Brixton prison taking four rifles and a quantity of Sinn Fein literature.

The guard about Brixton prison has been augmented as a precaution against possible outbreaks by MacSweeney sympathizers, on occasions of guard details of forty men each now patrol the jail area.

Medical aid was said to have slept well before midnight, but to have been restless early Monday morning.

"Swank" Has Many Meanings.

Although "swank"—as a writer in one of our contemporaries remarks, when apologizing for the use of the word—is of German origin, it has been employed by the English-speaking for a long period, and has a large number of widely varying meanings, and are word is applied to a man who drinks to excess.

In Yorkshire, too, "swanker" is used in a flattering sense to describe a strapping youth, or anything large of its kind, such as a house, a tree, or an ox.

Weak, inferior beer is called swank in many parts of England, and in Sussex it is a pet name for a child—"the equivalent of the cockney "nipper."

Swanking, in the sense of "putting on side," was commonly used in the west of England long before it was adopted by Londoners. — London Chronicle.

Making Up.

"About the only difference I can see between a Pullman porter and a married man," remarked Amos Knut, "is that one says he's sorry, and the other makes up excuses." "How about the girl who makes up her—appearance?" queried a bystander.

Must Drink Wine or Beer.

GENEVA, Sept. 28.—The inhabitants of the village of Martigny face the prospect of being able to drink only wine and beer for some time, as a result of the town waterworks being washed away on Saturday by the bursting of a glacier through the Charmonieux valley, caused by the bursting of a glacier pocket.

The flood is now receding, but it will be some days before the waterworks can be rebuilt.

The damage done through the valley totals many millions of francs, but no lives were lost.

Must Pay Taxes.

VANCOUVER, B.C., Sept. 28.—The long arm of the law at Ottawa was felt here Saturday when the Minister of Justice for Canada issued writs against 206 people in the city and district for failure to pay their income taxes within the required period.

These writs are for a number of prominent people in the city, and are word is applied to a man who drinks to excess.

Burying of Car Worried Him.

LINDSAY, Sept. 28.—County Constable Conquergood arrived in town with a man who resides two miles north of Coboconk, and who, it is alleged, attempted or threatened to shoot his wife and family on Saturday and Sunday. The trouble arose from the proposed purchase of a car by the family. They disposed of stock, he claims, for that purpose, and this so worried him that the matter preyed upon his mind.

Canada's Overseas Trade is $2,351,000,000

Sea-borne $1,046,000,000

Land-borne $1,305,000,000

More than half this land-borne trade is ultimately sea-borne—but in Foreign Ships.

Every pound of Canadian products shipped from a port outside Canadian territory retards our maritime growth, weakens our national prosperity and places control of a part of our sea-borne commerce in the hands of a competitive nation.

A BEAUTY SPOT.

Niagara-on-the-Lake a Link to the Past.

There is one small corner of Ontario, and one of the oldest corners of that, which seems to have been left like an isolated island in the midst of a great sea, in which the tide of life flow in ever-increasing volume east, west, north and south, but where these tides leave the island itself untouched.

This little spot is Niagara-on-the-Lake, the place where the first Parliament of the province assembled, and where every foot of land is historic ground. Buildings a century and more old, winding streets canopied by June foliage, ancient graveyards, even the French thorns on the common and by the river bank tell of the past—of the Indian who was here before the white man came, of the adventurous voyageur and empire builder, of the thin stream of emigrants who crossed the Niagara river after the Thirteen Colonies had ceased to be; of Brock and Laura Secord.

The story is all of the past. The marvellous changes and developments of the last fifty years have left this old place almost as serene and quiet as was Acadia in the time of Evangeline.

"A calm profound. Low in the West
With dying beams the setting sun
Kisses the dim horizon lingeringly
A last good night. Within the river's mouth
The shadows lengthen, while the very air,
Perfumed with subtle essences
Of new-mown hay and jessamine,
Doth seem to sleep.

On the beach
The drowsy murmur of the stream
Serves but to mark the silence—
God's gift to man, sent in his deep compassion
To rest his soul!"

Even the occasional locomotive whistle is softened by the overhanging branches of elm and maple. The boom of the sunset gun and the "last post" of the bugle at the fort across the river are mellowed by the distance covered by the span of slow-moving water. Such occasional sounds are as powerless to disturb the calm of a century as they are to make the sleepers in the churchyards. Here is one real haven of rest, of quiet—of beauty unspoiled by man.

But all this will change. The harnessing and double harnessing of Niagara power; location near the point of convergence of a continent-wide network of railways; at situation alongside the coming prolongation of ocean navigation to the head-waters of Lake Superior, will some day make the whole Niagara frontier one of the world's greatest industrial centres. The forces of nature directed by man will break down this last remaining bit of silence and rest. But before that day comes it is good to have one more look at the place as it still is with its reminders of the curling smoke of the wigwam, the canoes of the fur traders and the silent heroism of the pioneers who entered the dark shadows of the woods and blazed the river bank to hew out homes in the wilderness which once covered what is now the Keystone Province of the Canadian Confederation.—W. L. S. in the Globe.

HAVE NO TAXES.

These Fortunate People Live In Orsa, Sweden.

A well-to-do parish indeed is that of Orsa, in the province of Delafna, Sweden, so well to do that the people pay no individual taxes either to the local Government or the state. It is a parish, says Mgr. Frank E. Law, describing her visit to it in the columns of "Travel," where there are fine school houses, the best teachers procurable for good pay, excellent roads, bridges and railways. And all without taxes, and this parish of Orsa is so well to do that after it has paid all its expenses and set up its liabilities to the state Government it still has a substantial part of its yearly income to divide with the farmers who live in it.

That condition dates back to 1,500 years or more ago, when this spot in the northwestern wilderness of Sweden was settled, and the settlers came into possession of vast forests, which they decided to hold as common property. This was long before the age of lumbering in Sweden, and when that time came and the forests were commercially valuable, efforts were made to persuade the peasants of Orsa to sell their common forest property.

But these descendants of the first settlers were shrewd; they argued that their woodlands were probably worth more than was offered and refused to sell until finally the prospective buyers have raised their offer until the sum reached the total of millions. Then the forests were sold, but the money belonged to the community, and a parochial board was elected to administer the "forest fund," as it is called, for the benefit of the parish. Taxes were immediately abolished, a systematic improvement of the parish began and the custom instituted of yearly dividing a goodly sum among the farmers for the purchase of seed.

And so the parish of Orsa, in which the people are not individually wealthy and have for years worn the same peasant costumes, beams and still is the "richest parish in the world."

Indigo.

Indigo dye was always made from the juice of the indigo plant until the Germans invented a way of making it synthetically. English manufacturers of serge have recently been testing the natural and the artificial dyes, with the result that the natural gives a depth of color from 5 to 20 per cent. superior to the artificial. R. B. Armstrong, an authority on dyes, says the German process does not make indigo, but only one of the constituents of indigo, called indigotin.

How the Heckler Got His Name.

As the political spellbinders become perfervid in their oratorical efforts between now and election day next November the "heckler," no doubt, often will make himself heard. The average person usually wants to "get in his word and in doing so may become a "heckler."

In Scotland the word "hecklings" is very well understood. The word, which is spelled "hackler" in England and also in Ireland, is applied only to the flax trade. Prior to the introduction of machinery, "hackling" was a process carried out by hand, the "hackle" being an instrument consisting of a wooden base, into which a large number of steel pins were fixed at short distances from each other, projecting about four inches through the wooden base, somewhat after the style of a hairbrush.

The "hackler," or "heckler," held the flax material firmly by the hand, drawing it the requisite number of times through the hackle pins, thereby straightening and splitting the fibre and at the same time removing the loose fibre, which is called "tow." Nowadays this process is done by machinery, but the political application of the word "heckler" very soon finds out what a candidate is made of, and that, too, often in a much more rough-and-ready fashion than etiquette allows.

King Pays Penny for Seat.

In the soft sunshine a man entered Hyde Park, London, with a companion, and after a short stroll round they sat down, in the shade of a tree and chatted for a while.

The man who demands a penny a seat called on them and got a coin.

As he came away a police officer who had been standing by asked, "What did you get?"

"A threepenny bit."

"Give you sixpence for it."

"So will I," said a photographer.

"Give you a shilling for it," said the policeman.

"Let's have your bob," replied the chair controller.

The man who had paid for his chair was the King of the Belgians.

Messrs. Struthers and Greene, of New York city, arrived at Mr. James Rikley's, Hay Bay, at four o'clock on Wednesday afternoon and by six o'clock the same evening had landed three beautiful Masco's and two Bass. The Masco's weighed (25 pounds, 18 lbs., 7 oz., and (16 lbs., 4 oz.) They were in the bay for three days and secured in all six Masco, besides several others of smaller varieties. Mr. Ed. Denny, of Clayton, was the guide accompanying them.

The Match as a Deadly Toy.

The use of matches as a plaything is a very dangerous habit. In the Province of Ontario, during the year 1919, no fire in every eight originated through children playing with matches ; and they thus wantonly destroyed more than $3600 worth of valuable property, besides sacrificing several innocent lives. Even in the hands of careless men and women many fires are caused by thoughtlessly throwing a match in a waste paper basket, or pile of rubbish, before it is quenched. A good plan is to break the stick in two and then you will be sure that there is no fire in it.

Shephard-Anderson Nuptials.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at St. George's Cathedral, on Wednesday, Sept. 22nd, at 9.30 a.m., Dean Starr officiating, when Miss Grace Anderson, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Anderson, Bagot street, Kingston, was united in marriage to Wilfred H. Shephard, eldest son of E. P. Shephard, of Bath, Ont. The youthful bride was very prettily gowned in navy satin, and wore a large picture hat to match, and a corsage bouquet of red roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Bessie Anderson, niece of the bride, looked pretty in navy blue satin, with a corsage bouquet of pale pink roses. The groom was assisted by his brother, F. Shephard. After the ceremony, the bridal party drove to the home of the bride, where they partook of a dainty wedding breakfast. The tables were very tastefully decorated with roses, asters and ferns. The bride's going away gown was of navy blue serge, with travelling hat of midnight blue with a pearl veil. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful pearl pendant, to the bridesmaid a pearl bird brooch, and to the best man a pearl tie pin. The many and beautiful presents which were received, go to show the popularity of the happy couple. After a short honeymoon spent in Toronto, Mr. and Mrs. Shephard will take up their residence in Welland, Ont., and their many friends wish them joy and a long life.

Business Men and the Fire Waste.

At the time when increased production is of the first importance destruction of means of production continues on a great scale. Each year approximately $30,000,000 in property values are being destroyed in Canada through fire. A large part of this value represents waste that can be prevented. Considerations that should appeal to every individual require that, even if conditions were normal, the endeavors which are being made to stop this needless waste, with its detriment to the public interest and its private burden to all citizens, should be redoubled. At a time when economy and conservation of our resources must be paramount, in order that every effort may have its full influence toward increasing production, it becomes the immediate duty of each person, each association and the whole nation to put an end to preventable waste through fire.

Broke His Ankle.

Mr. A. J. Smith had the misfortune to fall and break his ankle badly on Friday last while working at Mr. Isaac Taylor's new house in Richmond. He was working on a low scaffold and the board he was standing on broke letting him down. At the same time another board fell striking him on the ankle.

Serious Loss by Fire.

The residence of Mr. Stewart Shutler, on the Newburgh road, was completely destroyed by fire on Friday afternoon last. The fire started from the explosion of a coal oil stove, and spread so rapidly that very little of the contents were saved, and nothing at all remains of the fine farm house. Insurance of $1000 on the house, and $500 on contents does not nearly represent the loss sustained by Mr. Shetlor.

Church Union at Newburgh.

"A meeting was held in the Newburgh Presbyterian church, to finally decide the question of co-operation with the Methodist church of that place, in accordance with the plan worked out by the joint committee of the two churches. This scheme embraces all the mission fields and augmented congregations in the Kingston Presbytery and effects parts of two conferences in the Methodist church, Bay of Quinte and Montreal. The meeting decided that owing to the need of men and money elsewhere, it would be wisdom to unite forces and release men and funds as far as possible, for more needy fields.

In the miscellaneous list is included "Farm Feeds," "The Use of Coarse Grain for Human Food," and a new edition of "The Maple Sugar Industry in Canada." All these publications are for the free use of the citizens of Canada and are obtainable for the asking from the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

A DEADLY REGION.

It Is Shunned by the People of Mexico.

Revolutionary bands and brigands may ride up and down Mexico, but there is one strip of territory that even the hardiest and most daring of them will not brave. That region, which is shunned by all humanity, is given over to the deadly alacrans, or scorpions.

It is a desolate desert country that extends from a point near the city of Durango to the borders of the state of Zacatecas, about seventy-five miles long by fifty miles wide.

It is asserted that the myriads of scorpions which infest that region are the most deadly of the species. In fact, it is rarely the case that a victim of the sting of an alacran survives the poison.

In the City of Durango, although regarded as outside of the more deadly zone, the death rate, due to scorpion stings, is very high. This is especially true as to children. The alacrane, as the insect is commonly called, is regarded as such a deadly pest that for many years the municipal government has paid a bounty of one centavo, or about one-half cent of Canadian money, for each one killed and delivered to the official custodian of dead scorpions.

Something like 100,000 of the scorpions are killed and bounty paid for them annually. In fact, killing scorpions is a regular industry with many men, women and children of Durango. One is told that some of the natives even go so far as to establish regular colonies of the poisonous insects in their homes for the purpose of breeding them for the market.

While the scorpion pest in the city of Durango and its immediate environs is serious enough, it is in the so-called "malo," or bad belt, which borders the Sierra Madre range that the insects are so numerous and deadly as to make the region practically uninhabitable. They are such a scourge that they have even rid the region of all other animal life. It is only occasionally that some venturesome native enters the territory that is given over to the plague of scorpions, and he usually pays for his daring with his life.

In other parts of Mexico where scorpions are found in considerable numbers their stings are not of deadly effect, although painful. It is explained by scientists that the reason the Durango scorpions are the bearers of such a deadly poison is that they absorb into their system in some manner a peculiar quality of the mineralized soil of the territory that they inhabit.

One of the first warnings that a child receives when it comes to an understanding age is to beware of the alacranes. The insects hunt opt the damp, dark places in the homes and it is not unusual for one of them to suddenly drop from the low ceiling of the living room or kitchen, causing terror and consternation to the occupants.

How to make housework easier is explained on page 5, in Gibbard's advertisement.

WAR SERVICE OF W.C.T.U. RECOGNIZED

Announcement Made by Y.M.C.A., Of Work Done Under Its Auspices.

Resolution of National Executive of Y.M.C.A. in Acknowledgement of Final Contribution.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee the National Council of the Y.M.C.A., gave special recognition of the war work done under its auspices by the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Ontario. The occasion was the acknowledgement of receipt of final contribution of $1,500 of the funds raised by the women's organization during the war. The earlier funds were used for service to the soldiers in France, and this final amount is to be applied to service to returned men in the Military Hospitals.

The Executive Committee took occasion to place on record its appreciation of the valuable work which the W.C.T.U. has done. The resolution covering it refers to the fact that while many organizations assisted the Y.M.C.A., the part taken by the W.C.T.U. was unique. They had chosen this Association as the medium through which they could best do their work for the soldiers, and had adhered to this partnership most faithfully and generously throughout the war. Because of their work being done through another organization, it had not received the public recognition which it merited, and the National Council expresses regret that more adequate acknowledgement had not been made at the proper time. It was especially regretted that the soldiers themselves had not been more fully informed as to the amount of service rendered them by this temperance organization.

The W. C. T. U. began their work through the Y. M. C. A. quite early in the war by undertaking to supply the service funds required for two or three of the secretaries in France. Later they took up the special service of free drinks for men at the front. Increased amounts of money were raised for this purpose and during the height of the war approximately twenty-five per cent. of the large amount spent by the Y. M. C. A. on this item was supplied by the women's contributions.

It was in the raising of these funds that the W. C. T. U. adopted the unique method of the "Trinket Fund," following the example of the women of England. A surprising quantity of jewelry and trinkets was collected and through careful dealing with jewellers was turned into funds for the benefit of the soldiers.

The total amount of money contributed by the W. C. T. U. through the Y. M. C. A. was set forth in the resolution as follows:

Amount contributed to the support of the work of individual Y. M. C. A. Secretaries in France..	$ 9,526
Amount contributed for free drinks for soldiers at the front—
By the W.C.T.U.'s of Ontario.....	838,400
By the W.C.T.U.'s of Saskatchewan as a result of the efforts of the Ontario Unions.	3,000
By the W.C.T.U. of Nova Scotia....	1,600
Total.....	$852,526

This total, while not large in comparison, was one of the most worthy contributions to war purposes, coming as it did in small sums from a wide constituency. The women of this organization were zealous and systematic givers to a proportion of their limited resources which far exceeded that of the supporters of the larger funds.

The resolution of the National Council concludes with instructions that public acknowledgement should be made of the receipt of the above funds together with a statement covering the work to which they were applied.

NOTE—The $1,500 referred to in the first paragraph should be added to the second item in the report as given above, making the W. C. T. U. Free Drink Contribution $39,900, and bringing the total up to $54,026.

Thug Highwater Channel.

Eighty per cent. of the world's tonnage would be available for lake and ocean traffic at once if the proposed Great Lakes-St. Lawrence tidewater channel was open, C. C. West, vice-president of a shipbuilding company at Manitowoc, Wis., told the International Joint Waterways Commission a few days ago.

He said this percentage of vessels, going between all the ports of the world, could enter Duluth harbor if the channel project went through. It was said that the lake ports were built, generally speaking, to accommodate ships of 22 feet draft.

"There are now 91 big between seven ports 12,500 vessels of less than 4,000 tons capacity," he said. There are 3,521 vessels of between 1,500 and 3,000 tons, 5,000 of between 3,000 and 7,000 tons, 2,000 of between 7,000 and 15,000 tons, and 758 vessels of more than 15,000," he added. This does not include passenger ships, and the proposed St. Lawrence channel would accommodate vessels of from 6,000 to 7,000 tons burden.

Nebraska Immigrants.

According to a statement just made public by W. V. Bennett, in charge of the Canadian Government land office in Omaha, the great tide of emigration of 1912 and 1913 to Western Canada is about to be repeated. In the first three months of 1920 almost as many settlers from the trans-Missouri country have come to Canada as came all last year.

The statement adds that during the past twenty years Nebraskans have emigrated to the Dominion, taking with them approximately $50,000,000. The explanation given is that the farmers sell their farms in Nebraska for tremendous sums because they can purchase land just as good in the Dominion for one-third of what they sell for.

HAMILTON WOMAN GAINED 25 POUNDS

Mrs. Nichols Only Weighed Ninety Pounds Before she Started Taking Taniac.

"My wife has not only gained twenty-five pounds in weight but is enjoying better health than she has for years past, and we've got to thank Taniac for it," declared Richard J. Nichols, of 88 Last 24th St., Mountain Top, Hamilton, a few days ago.

"Owing to the strain of bringing up the children and doing all her own work, she had been in a general run-down condition for the past four years. Her appetite was very poor and the little she ate caused indigestion. The gas would form so bad as to bloat her up so she could hardly breathe She had frequent sick headaches and always got up in the mornings feeling dull and heavy. She lost flesh until she only weighed ninety pounds, and although she tried all sorts of medicine none of them gave her more than temporary relief.

"She heard of so many people being helped by Taniac that she thought she would like to try it and so I got a bottle for her. I was surprising to see the way it gave her an appetite and in a short time she could eat anything she desired and never had any trouble with gas or indigestion afterwards. As I've already said she has gained twenty-five pounds in weight and feels fine all the time. The tired feeling is all gone she never has a headache now, sleeps well at night and gets up feelin gas fresh as a May morning. I just can't describe how thankful I am for the great good it has done her, and I have every confidence in recommending the medicine."

Taniac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Wagarville by S. JACKSON.

Prince Wore Right Hat.

The Prince of Wales changed his coat for what the English call a bowler on Flemington racecourse, Melbourne, Australia, when he found the members of the reception committee more ceremonially clad than he had anticipated.

Joseph Chamberlain would have been glad of the opportunity of making a similar change at Durban in 1902. When he reached that city during his South African tour the Colonial Secretary caused some amusement by driving through the thronged streets wearing a helmet. Durban is not in the tropics, and the vast majority of Durbanites never wear helmets. Straw hats and soft felts are the usual thing, silk hats seeing the light only on very special occasions.

The Colonial Secretary's visit ranked as one of these, so a wonderful collection of antique toppers was displayed in his honor. The Durbanites were trying to pay a compliment to Chamberlain by looking English, and the great man was attempted to look Durbanish in a helmet.

The Thirteenth Commandment

By RUPERT HUGHES

Copyright by Harper & Brothers

Lella was poring over her bank book, the blank pages in which so many dramas, tragedies and life histories could be codified in bald numerals.

Her first question was ominous: "Do I have to go all the way down to Broad street every time I want to draw out some money?".

Her first thought was already to attack the integrity of her store.

"No, dearest," said Bayard, "there is an uptown branch, right around the corner. But I hope your visits there will be more for a put-in than take-out. Every time I give you anything I want you to put some of it aside. Maybe some day I'll want to borrow some of it for a while. Maybe you can save me from a crash some day. Anyhow, it will be a great help to me to feel that I have a thrifty little wife at home. A man has to plunge a good deal in business. It's his wife that usually makes him or breaks him."

Bayard spoke with unusual solemnity: "Old Ben Franklin said, 'A shilling earned and sixpence spent, a fortune. Sixpence earned and a shilling spent, bankruptcy'—or something like that. But Moses got ahead of him. When he handed down the Ten Commandments he whispered an extra one to be the private secret of the chosen people."

"What was it?" said Lella with a minimum of interest.

"Thou shalt not spend all thou earnest," said Bayard. "It was—well, it was the Thirteenth Commandment, I guess—a mighty unlucky one to break. The Jews have kept it pretty well. They've been the bankers of the world even while they were persecuted."

Lella shrugged her handsome shoulders and studied the gems.

"Let's not talk about it tonight. Let's dine somewhere and go to the theater. I want to show off my new splendor."

"Fine!" said Bayard, trying to cast away his forebodings and lift himself by his own boot straps. "Get on your duds mother, you and Daphne."

"I can't go," said Daphne. "I've got to be at the fun-factory at half past seven and I've hardly time to eat anything."

While Lella and Bayard and Mrs. Kip were putting on their festal robes Daphne was eating alone a hasty meal brought up tardily from the restaurant.

Before they were dressed she had to march out in what she called her working clothes. The hallman ran to call her a taxicab, but she shook her head. Her humble twenty-five dollars a week would not justify a chariot to and from the shop.

She walked rapidly along Fifty-ninth street, but not rapidly enough to escape one or two murmurous gallants.

She found Batterson quarreling with a property man over the responsibility for a broken vase. He ignored her till at length she ventured to stammer:

"Here I am, Mr. Batterson."

"So I see. Well, sit down somewhere."

Finding a seat was no easy task. Every piece of furniture she selected became at once the object of the scene shifter's attack and she had to take flight.

Members of the company strolled in, paused at the mailbox and went to their various cells.

Eventually Batterson found that all the company was on hand and in good health. He said to Daphne, "Everybody is here and nobody sick, so you needn't stay after the curtain goes up."

But she wanted to learn her trade, so she loitered about, feeling like an uninvited poor relation. The members of the company came from their lairs, looking odd and unreal in their paint. They seemed to be surprised that Daphne was still in existence. Eldon gave her a curious smile of greeting.

She heard the call boy crying "Overture" about the corridors. She heard the orchestra playing "the king's piece." Then it struck up a march that sounded remote and irrelevant. There was a loud swish which she supposed to be the curtain going up. An actor and an actress in white flannels with tennis rackets under their arms linked hands and skipped into the well of light. They bandied repartee for a time.

Eldon, speaking earnestly to Mrs. Vining, suddenly began to laugh softly. He laughed louder and louder and then plunged into the light.

A little later Eldon came off the stage laughing. He dropped his laughter as he crossed the border and resumed his anecdote. "As I was saying—"

"But Mrs. Vining interrupted: "There comes my cue. How are They tonight?"

"Rather cold," said Eldon; "it's so hot."

"The swine!" said Mrs. Vining. Then she shook out her skirts, straightened up and swept through the door like a dowager swan.

One of the box lights began to sputter, and Batterson dashed round from the other wing to curse the man in charge. He ran into Daphne, glared, and spoke harshly: "You needn't wait any longer. You're discharged."

Daphne swallowed her pride and slunk out.

CHAPTER XI.

She woke early next morning. It was just six o'clock. She remembered that her father would be arriving in two hours. She decided that it would be a pleasant duty to surprise the poor, old, neglected codger by meeting him.

At the Grand Central station Daphne found that she was nearly an hour too early for the train. It amused her to take her breakfast at the lunch counter, to clamber on the high stool and eat the dishes of haste—a cup of coffee and a ham sandwich. It was pleasant to wander about alone in this atmosphere of speed, the suburban trains, like feed pipes, spouting streams of workers, the out-bound trains drawing their passengers to far-off destinies as if by suction.

At length it was time for the train. Daphne went to the rope-barrier opposite the door of entry and waited in ambush for her father.

At length she made out a rather shabby man carrying his own luggage. It was her father. He looked older and seedier than she remembered. He did not expect to be met. He was looking idly at the new station. He had not been in New York since it had been thrown open.

She ran to him. He dropped his old suitcase on the toes of the man following him and embraced Daphne with fervor. He devoured her with his eyes and kissed her again and told her that she was prettier than ever. All about them there were little groups embracing and kissing. There was a wonderful business in reunions.

When her father said, "I haven't had my breakfast; have you?" she lied affectionately, "No."

"Let's have some breakfast together."

"Fine," said Daphne. "We'll go to the Biltmore."

"Kind of expensive, isn't it?" he asked anxiously.

"It's my treat," she said.

This amused him enormously. "So you're going to treat, eh?"

"Yep," she said.

"Where did you get all the money?"

"I'm a working lady now."

He laughed again and shook his head over her.

"What did you mean by saying you were a working lady?" said Wesley when they were seated at the table and breakfast was ordered. "Your mother wrote me something about having a little disagreement with you. She seemed to be right worried, so I thought I'd better run on to see if I couldn't sort of smooth things over. I'm glad you came to meet me. We can talk without interruption for once. Tell me all about it."

She told him the whole story of her decision to join the great social revolution that is freeing women from the slavery of enslaving the men. Her peroration was her new watchword: "I don't want to take any more money from you."

"Why, honey," he protested, "I love to give it to you. I only wish I had ten times as much. I couldn't dream of letting you work. You're too pirty. What's that young Wimburn cub mean by letting you work?"

"Oh, he's bitterly opposed to it, so I gave him his ring."

"Well, I never!" he gasped. "And all this trip of your mother's and yours and all the expenses gone for nothing?" was his first doleful thought. He remembered the second mortgage he had placed on one of his properties to get the money for the vitally important wedding festival. And now there was to be no wedding. The son-in-law who was to have assumed the burden of Daphne's bills was banished. Daphne was again her father's own child.

He was glad to have her back, but he could have wished that she had not gone away, since he paid the freight in both directions. And here was himself in New York and nothing to show for all the spilt milk of time, money and emotions.

At the critical moment Daphne mentioned that the star whose understudy she was would earn fifty thousand dollars that year in spite of the hard times. "Fifty thousand dollars" had a musical sound to Wesley's ears. If Daphne could earn a tenth of that he would believe in miracles.

"Where were you planning to live, honey, while you're acting? With Bayard, I suppose."

"Oh no," said Daphne; "we're ruined his honeymoon enough already."

"Who with, then?"

"Oh, by myself, I suppose."

"Good Lord! you couldn't do that very well—a young girl like you."

"Why not?" she said.

He turned pale. This was like being asked why babies were found under cabbage leaves. He was an old-fashioned father, and he had never been able to rise to the new school of discussing vitally important topics with the children vitally interested.

"Why, why," he stammered, "why, because nobody does it, honey. Nice girls don't live alone."

Daphne studied him with a tender amusement. He was so innocent in his way, in spite of all he must know. She understood what he was thinking of. She was sophisticated in the manner of the nice girl of her time and she liked to feel submerged themes with clean candor. She thought that prudery was a form of slavery.

"If you've just got to stay in New York and just got to work your mother could stay with you, I suppose."

"But what becomes of you and your home?"

"Oh, I'll get along somehow. I don't matter."

This broke her heart. She cried out: "But you do matter, daddy; you matter terribly. Can't you understand, daddy, that I'm trying to relieve you and make myself useful instead of a parasite? Thousands of women live alone—professional women, art students, music students, college girls, normal-school women, besides the women in shops and factories. It's coming more and more."

"But you're not brought up to a trade."

"I wish I had been."

"Well, that's a new complaint, anyway, but — well — of course you wouldn't do anything wrong; but if you lived alone you'd be misjudged, and men would keep throwing temptation in your way."

"I had plenty of that when I was living at home."

"Daphne!" He cried out in pain at the very thought.

She went on, educating him with a vengeance: "Plenty of temptation and plenty of opportunity, daddy. It wasn't your fault. You gave me all the protection that anybody could, daddy. But you can't protect people all the time. And it was when you trusted me most that you protected me most. People are just beginning to realize that even in penitentiaries the higher the walls and the stricter the guards the more prisoners try to escape. They're sending convicts out to work on roads now with no guards at all. And they do their work and come back. Don't you think women can be trusted as far as convicts?"

"I suppose so," he sighed. But he was convinced of the security of neither the convicts nor of the women under these new anarchies. He was convinced of only one thing, and that was his helplessness.

Daphne took him home in a taxicab. At the apartment they caught Bayard just rushing for his office. He greeted his father with whirlwind affection, but he knew that he would please Wesley better by hurrying on to his office than by neglecting his business for the purpose of entertainment.

Wesley took Lella by storm with his lavish and whole-hearted praise. He had not seen her before. He gathered her to his breast, then held her out at arm's length to praise her and to praise Bayard for bringing her into the family.

Mrs. Kip did not delay long the assault on Daphne's position. But Wesley said:

"We've had a long talk and I guess she's pretty set in her way. She's a good girl, though, mamma. And she knows her own mind better than we do. Anyways, it's her own mind. Let her have her way and if anything goes wrong she can always come back home."

His wife boiled over. It made her feel as much at home as an old kettle on a stove to have her husband there to boil over on: "Wesley Kip, are you going to set there and encourage that girl to ruin her life and her reputation without doing anything to protect her?"

"Oh, I guess she's not going to ruin anything. After all, the best way to protect folks is to trust 'em."

It was bald plagiarism, but Daphne made no complaint. Wesley got into trouble at once, however, by making the suggestion that his wife remain as a companion for her child. Mrs. Kip took it as a sign that he wanted to get rid of her, and Daphne refused to take it at all.

Wesley sat pondering in silence for a while; then he rose and, mumbling, "Be back in a little while," took his hat and went out.

They wondered what mischief he was up to and what folly he would commit. He came back in half an hour with a smile of success.

"I guess it's all right. I been thinking about all the different things been said. We don't want Daphne living by herself and she don't feel like she ought to trespass on Lella's home; so I got an idea and went down and saw the janitor or superintendent or whatever he is, and I asked him mightn't it be there was somebody in this building wanted to rent a room to a nice girl. And he said there was a young couple felt the rent was a little high and had an extra room. So we went up and took a look at it. Right nice young woman, name of Chivvis or something like that; said she'd be glad to take my daughter in. I was thinking that if Daphne was up there she could see Bayard and Lella when she was lonesome or anything; and she'd be handy where they could keep an eye on her if she got sick or anything." The three women looked at him in amazement. He had solved the riddle that baffled them all and had compromised the irreconcilables.

"I'll bet the place is a sight and the woman a freak," said Mrs. Kip. "Let's go have a look at her."

So all four went up in the elevator to the top floor. They were about to ring the bell of one of the big front doors that like Bayard's but Wesley checked them.

"It's in the back."

The women exchanged glances and smiles behind the important shoulder blades of Wesley, the manager. He rang a bell and a young woman opened the door. As Lella said afterward:

"She had the whole map of New England in her face, and her middle name was Boston."

But she was young, in a placid, Puritanical way, and she looked exceedingly clean and correct. Her very smile was neat, exactly adjusted between those of the gracious hostess and of the landlady.

Mrs. Chivvis led the way to the room that was for rent. It took Daphne at once. Spotlessness is a first luxury in a rented room and Puritan beauty has a grace all its own. The mahogany bed with its twisted posts, the excellent linen and the honesty of everything won her completely.

She felt a sense of relief from the rather gaudy beauty of Leila's apartment. She felt that Mrs. Chivvis, who showed such fine restraint in her furniture, would be equally discreet in minding her own affairs.

"I'll take it," she said; "that is, if you'll take me."

Mrs. Chivvis said she would. She said it with a New Englandish parsimony of enthusiasm, but her eyes were kindly and Daphne decided that she thought nice things but lacked the courage to say them.

Daphne moved at once into the Chivvis apartment what belongings she had brought on from Cleveland, and her mother promised to dispatch the rest of them as soon as she reached home. Wesley could not be persuaded to stay over an unnecessary night. His business was in a perilous condition. The mammoth Cowper firm had gone into bankruptcy owing him a handsome sum of money which he was not likely to recover. The failure had closed an important and profitable market for his calculating machine. It frightened his banks as well, so he had wrestled like another Jacob with an almost invisible cashier for money enough to meet his pay roll.

Yet he slipped a large bill into Daphne's hand when he bade her good-by at the station late in the afternoon, and he whispered to her that she should have other re-enforcement whenever she called on him.

Daphne reached the theater at seven o'clock and sat in the dark on a cable vaus rock, watching the stage hands gather and listening to their repartee.

Batterson arrived at length. He sat in one of his humane moods. He asked Daphne if she had memorized her lines and she said she had. He told her that he would give her another rehearsal the next day after breakfast. "After breakfast," he explained, was one o'clock p. m.

Next morning Daphne presented herself to Batterson and endured one of his rehearsals, with his assistant reading all the cues in a lifeless voice. Batterson was more discouraged than she was. He showed it for a time by a patience that was of the sort one shows in a shy imbecile.

He was so restrained that Daphne broke out for him, "Do you think I am a complete idiot, Mr. Batterson?"

"Far from it, my dear," said Batterson. "You are a very intelligent young woman. The trouble is that you are too intelligent for the child's play of the stage. It's all a kind of big nursery and you can't forget that facts are not facts in this toy game. If you could let yourself go and be foolish and play doll house you might succeed. It's hard even when you know how. But it's impossible as long as you try to reason it out. It's like music and fiction and all the arts. You've got to pretend or you can't feel and you can't make anybody else feel."

And that, indeed, was Daphne's agony. She could not release her imagination or command her clear vision to see what was not there.

Night after night she reported at the theater and left it when the curtain rose. On one of these evenings Tom Duane met her outside the stage door. His apology was that he felt it his duty to look after his client.

He invited Daphne to ride home in his car, which was waiting at the curb. She declined with thanks. He urged that she take a little spin in the park. She declined without thanks. He sighed that it was a pity to lose the moonlight.

She said she would get enough when she walked home. He asked if he might "toddle along." She could hardly refuse without crassly insulting him.

They loitered slowly up the quiet reach of Seventh avenue. He questioned her about her work with all the grateful flattery there is in an appetite for another's autobiography. She found it easy to tell him of her difficulties. He extracted encouragement or indirect compliment out of all of them.

When they arrived at her apartment house she said, "Sorry I can't ask you up, but I have no reception room, and I'm tired out."

"You have wasted enough of your time on me," he said. "I'll see you to the elevator."

As Daphne stepped into the hallway she found Clay Wimburn there, waiting grimly. He sprang to his feet with a gasp of relief. He caught sight of Duane and his joy died instantly.

Wimburn loved Daphne and wanted her for his own. He had counted her his own, and still had neither refunded the engagement ring nor paid for it. Daphne was more pleased with Wimburn's misery than with Duane's fetity.

"Won't you come up, Clay?" she asked.

He murmured, "Can we be alone for a little talk?"

"I'm afraid not. The Chivvises, you know."

"Will you take a little walk with me in the park?"

"All right," she said as she led the way out into the street. "I'm pretty tired, though. I walked home from the theater."

"With Duane!" Clay snarled. "You weren't too tired for that."

Daphne thought of the motor ride and the supper she had declined. She said, "Are you dragging me out here for the sake of a fight?"

"There'll be no fight if you'll cut out that man Duane."

"Am I to have no friends at all?"

"You can have all you want, provided—"

"Let me give you one little hint, Clay, for your own information. Every time this Mr. Duane that you're so afraid of meets me he does his best to help me get my chance and he tells me only pleasant things. Every time you've come to see me lately you've been either a sick cat or a roaring tiger."

She was planning to urge him to help her and make their meetings cozier. But, love-like, he took umbrage and pain and despair from her advice, and since they were again at the vestibule he sighed, "Good night, Mrs. Duane," and flung out into the dark.

Daphne sighed, and the poor elevator man who saw so much of this sort of thing sighed with her and for her.

CHAPTER XII.

All this while Daphne was kept in readiness to take Miss Kemble's part in case the illness of her child should result in death and in the further case that she should be unable to finish her performances. With the theatrical season in such bad estate and most of Reben's companies and theaters losing money heavily, Sheila Kemble was his one certain dependence. He called her his breadwinner.

Miss Kemble's baby passed the crisis and recovered. And then the mother, worn out, with the double strain, caught a little chill that became a blinding, choking cold. She went through the Saturday matinee in a whisper, but the night performance was beyond her.

And now at last Daphne's chance arrived. The Saturday night house was enormous in spite of the heat. There were enough people there to make fourteen hundred dollars—twenty-five hundred with the day.

Daphne, trudging to the theater for her usual stupid rebuff, walked into this crisis of her life.

Reben himself knocked at her dressing room door where Miss Winsor was helping her with her make-up. He implored her to be calm, and he was so tremulous that he stuttered. He told her that if she made good he would let her play the part till Miss Kemble got well. He would pay her a handsome bonus. He would put her out at the head of a number two company next season.

Batterson came at last and ordered him off the stage. Reben obeyed him. Then Batterson talked to her. He told her that there was no reason to fear the house. A Saturday night audience was always easy. It wanted its money's worth! It would help to get it.

"I see," said Daphne. "I'm not afraid of the audience."

"Then what on earth are you afraid of?"

"I'm afraid of me!"

Batterson laughed scornfully. "Oh, you! You're going to score a knock-out. You're going to make a big hit!"

"Yes," said Daphne, "so you've always told me."

The curtain rose. Miss Winsor and the young man skipped onto their job; the butler stalked; Eldon entered and made his exit. Mrs. Vining spread her skirts and sailed on, then Eldon went back. Finally Daphne's cue came.

She was startled a little as Batterson nudged her forward. She went to the door and opened it on her new career to make her public debut with the all-important "How d' you do?"

She saw before her the drawing room in a weird light. Beyond it was a fiercely radiant fog and beyond that an agglomeration of faces—the mass of tomato cans that she was not going to be afraid of.

And she was not afraid. She was curious to study them. She was eager to remember her lines. And she remembered them. Then cues came more or less far apart and each evoked from her mind the appropriate answer. She made never a slip, and yet she began to realize that Mr. Eldon seemed unhappy.

At length she realized that the audience was strangely quiet. A sense of vaulty emptiness oppressed her. She went on with her lines. She understood at last that she was getting no laughs. She was not provoking those punctuating roars that Sheila Kemble brought forth. The audience had evidently had a hard week.

She decided that she must be playing too quietly; she quickened her tempo and threw more vivacity into her manner. She moved briskly about the scene, to Eldon's bewilderment. He seemed unable to find her.

She went through to the bitter end and spoke every line. But the audience was not with her for a moment. She used all her intellect to find the secret of its pleasure, but she could not surprise it. She tried harder and harder, acted with the intense devotion of a wrestling bout, but she could not score a point.

The company looked worried and fagged. The audience would not rise to anything—humor, pathos, thrill. When the play was over everyone seemed to avoid her.

She rubbed off her make-up and resumed her mufti. As she walked out on the darkened stage she saw Batterson. He tried to escape, but she checked him.

"Tell me frankly, Mr. Batterson, what was the matter with my performance tonight."

"Come to the office Monday and we'll have a little talk."

"And I'll get my notice."

"I didn't say that."

"What would you honestly advise me to do?"

"I understand that you don't have to act. Go home and get married."

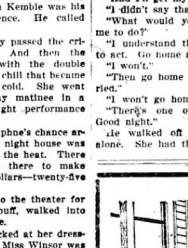
"I won't."

"Then go home and don't get married."

"I won't go home."

"There's one other place to go. Good night."

He walked off and she was left alone. She had the stage to herself.



"Go Home and Get Married."

She stood in the big void and felt alien—forever alien. She shook her head. This place was not for her. She had been tried in the balance and found wanting. She wondered if there were anywhere a balance that she could bring down.

ODESSA FAIR ON FRIDAY

There Was a Large Attendance —Horse Races and Base-ball match.

A very large crowd was in attendance at the annual fair of the Ernestown Agricultural Society held at Odessa on Friday afternoon. This year the fair was held a little earlier than usual, on account of the King and Industrial exhibition. The horse races and exhibits in the main building were exceptionally good.

A visit to the main building showed that the people in that section of the country, who are interested in the fair, spend many hours in getting the exhibits ready there was a very large display of farm produce, such as potatoes, carrots and other vegetables. Hanging on the wall in the main building were hundreds of dollars worth of beautiful fancy work which had been made by the ladies. In many cases, it was very difficult to decide on the prizes as everything was exceptionally good.

During the afternoon two excellent horse races were run off. There was the free-for-all, in which J. Lowry, Kingston, who drove "Laura Pointer" secured first money by taking a fourth, and three firsts. "Judge Murphy" was second, and "Toddie Ann" third. The "Classified Race," in which seven horses started, finished up in a win for "Day Spring", driven by T. McLaughlin. The results of the races are as follows:

Free-for-all, $75.00, $50.00, $25.00, $15.00.

The officials were: starter, Fred Laidley; judges, Ottis Huffman, Geo. Loyst and H. Williams.

"Wally Claire," Odessa, who drove a Reo car, proved that he can drive a car the slowest of any man in that section of the country, without stopping the engine. Six cars started in the race, but two stalled, as they were allowing their engines to run too slow. In this kind of a race the winner is the man who finishes last.

In the afternoon a baseball team, representing the Gibbard Furniture Company, Napanee, and the Adolphustown "Locked Horns" in a very exciting game, which resulted in a win for Adolphustown by a score of fifteen to thirteen. At first it looked as though Napanee would be victorious, but in the latter stage of the game, Adolphustown pulled together, with the result that they won the game. George Stewart, Kingston who plays for Adolphustown, but what should have been a home run, with men on bases. He was caught by inches at the plate. The teams were as follows:

Adolphustown—H. Smith, B. Roblin, G. Stewart, R. Allison, A. Dollard, J. Duffell, P. Allen, A. Cruse and A. Allen.

Napanee—McNeill, Miles, Huffman, Rooks, J. Johnston, Gibbard, Rose Loucks, Pybus, R. Loucks.

Umpire, "Billy" Dunn, Yarker. As a result of being struck by a bat, which flew from the hands of one of the players, the son of Sydney Clark, auctioneer, Odessa, was knocked unconscious and a doctor had to be summoned. After half an hour, he came round all right, and appeared to be suffering no serious injury with the exception that one of his teeth had been pushed through his lip.

"Sandy" McGregor, who is known as Canada's Hilarity Laudy, was present in the afternoon and sang one song while standing in the judge's stand during the horse races, and in the evening, the Dramatic Society, of Odessa, put on a play entitled, "Blundering Mr. Brown," society as assisted by "Sandy," who delighted the audience with his singing. The play, in three acts, was exceptionally well presented, reflecting great credit on all who took part. The Odessa Dramatic Society, of which Mr. G. Clark is president and Mrs. (Dr.) J. E. Mabee is secretary, is deserving of great credit for the splendid performance staged on Friday evening. Those who took part in the play were:

B. G. Hamm, Walter Snyder, W. G. Clark, G. H. Remington, Mrs. J. E. Mabee, Miss Laura Fraser, B.A., Mrs. Walter Snyder, and Mrs. W. G. Clark.

It is said to have been formed toward the end of the thirteenth century after a great storm when the sea swept inland through the isthmus connecting Friesland with northern Holland and converted the Flevo lake into a sheet of salt water.
